

Second Quarter 2021

CenterSquare's REIT Cap Rate Perspective seeks to quantify the valuation gap between public and private markets, offering investors insights as to the possible future direction of real estate values through our proprietary REIT implied cap rate results across sectors.

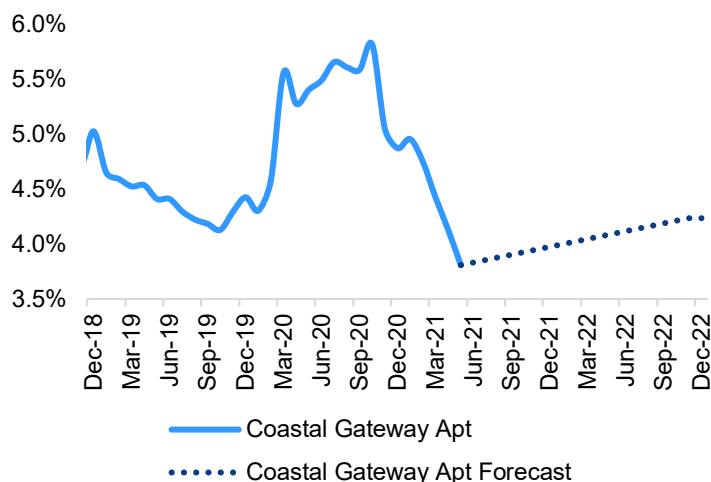

The Coastal Recovery

The concept of global cities came to prominence during the 1980s when large urban centers were recognized for their role as hubs in an increasingly international economy, driving innovation, boosting productivity, and promoting economic growth. Today in the United States, these cities are largely situated on the eastern and western coasts of the country and include Boston, New York, Washington DC, Miami, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Their ecosystems have perpetually been fueled by a benevolent cycle that generates major benefits and efficiencies for businesses, people, and the structures that house them. The cycle has continued to churn, and cities have served as dense meccas of activity, propelling them forward and fortifying opportunities for development and investment. And for decades, the certainty around their prosperity remained constant.

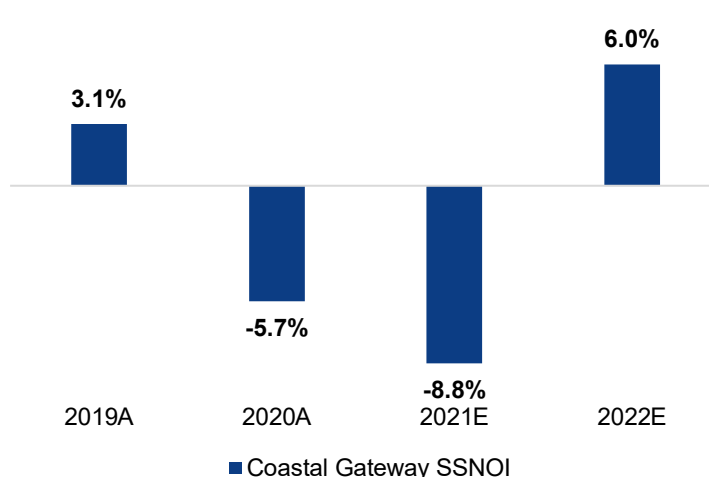

When the pandemic hit, the density associated with urban centers became a threat, and as businesses shuttered, populations engaged in a mass exodus. The real estate assets that supported the engine -- office buildings, multifamily housing, industrial spaces, retail shops and hospitality properties -- were no longer guaranteed occupancy and success. The future of gateway cities became unclear. Yet, when we examined more closely where citizens were fleeing, we found it was not far from the busy streets and neighborhoods they were inhabiting when COVID struck. In fact, according to the National Association of Realtors' analysis of USPS data, nearly 80% of those who left New York City went to one of the nearby counties, suggesting that once a vaccine was available a mass return was possible -- and, we believed, probable.

Though COVID-19 called into question the resilience of coastal gateway cities, we were always believers in these hubs of economic growth. Today, we are seeing that resurgence in real-time as marked improvement of multifamily sector fundamentals in these cities are steadily flowing through into the public market's expectations. As demand is coming back into these markets, occupancies are rising and pricing power is returning for landlords, who can pull back on concessionary activity. As a result, asking rents across most major markets are returning to their pre-COVID peak, in a recovery that was faster than anticipated by most real estate investors. Today, the public market is expecting a meaningful upturn in NOI growth and cap rate expansion for coastal gateway apartments into 2022 as cities return to their former epicenters of activity.

CenterSquare REIT Cap Rate Perspective Methodology

CenterSquare REIT Implied Cap Rates are based on a proprietary calculation that divides a company's reporting net operating income ("NOI") adjusted for non-recurring items by the value of its equity and debt less the value of non-income producing assets. The figures above are based on 2Q21 earnings reported in June 2021.

The universe of stocks used to aggregate the data presented is based on CenterSquare's coverage universe of approximately 200 U.S. listed real estate companies. Sector cap rates are market cap weighted. Sectors and market classifications are defined by the following:

Apartment: REITs that own and manage multifamily residential rental properties; Industrial: REITs that own and manage industrial facilities (i.e. warehouses, distribution centers); Office – REITs that own and manage commercial office properties; Retail – REITs that own and manage retail properties (i.e. malls, shopping centers); Hotel – REITs that own and manage lodging properties; Healthcare – REITs that own properties used by healthcare service tenants (i.e. hospitals, medical office buildings); Gateway – REITs with portfolios primarily in the Boston, Chicago, LA, NYC, SF, and DC markets; Non-Gateway – REITs without a presence in the gateway markets.

The REIT ODCE Proxy is a universe of REIT stocks built to resemble the NCREIF Fund Index – Open End Diversified Core Equity (ODCE). The ODCE, short for NCREIF Fund Index - Open End Diversified Core Equity, is the first of the NCREIF Fund Database products and is an index of investment returns reporting on both a historical and current basis the results of 36 open-end commingled funds pursuing a core investment strategy, some of which have performance histories dating back to the 1970s. The REIT ODCE Proxy is proprietary to CenterSquare and uses gateway/infill names in apartments, retail, industrial and office, and then weights them according to the ODCE index to create a proxy.

Private Market Cap Rates represent the cap rate achievable in the private market for the property portfolio owned by each company, and are based on estimates produced by CenterSquare's investment team informed by various market sources including broker estimates.

Because the investment strategies concentrate their assets in the real estate industry, an investment is closely linked to the performance of the real estate markets. Investing in the equity securities of real estate companies entails certain risks and uncertainties. These companies experience the risks of investing in real estate directly. Real estate is a cyclical business, highly sensitive to general and local economic developments and characterized by intense competition and periodic overbuilding. Real estate income and values may also be greatly affected by demographic trends, such as population shifts or changing tastes and values. Companies in the real estate industry may be adversely affected by environmental conditions. Government actions, such as tax increases, zoning law changes or environmental regulations, may also have a major impact on real estate. Changing interest rates and credit quality requirements will also affect the cash flow of real estate companies and their ability to meet capital needs.
